Parenting Children in a Diverse Society

Be-coming a multiracial family through foster care or adoption is common, rewarding, challenging, and complex. Children fare better when their caregivers are prepared with tools, information, and skills to best support their identity. Through small group discussion, lecture, question-answer, and a speaker panel, participants explore the dynamics of white privilege, and what ethnic minority children need from their parents, siblings and other caring adults in order to grow up with strong self-esteem.

To Register:

Feedback from past attendees:

"It brought up a lot of questions that I hadn't thought about and will need to figure out."

"This training helped stress what we need to help prepare our child for what he may encounter, not just overt 'in your face' experiences, but also the inadvertent prejudices."

"Including personal experiences helps make everything feel so much more real."
